NEW DELHI: The Delhi Jal Board (DJB) convened a board meeting on Monday, during which the agency cleared pre-positioned several online all services of annual revenue offices and the utility's M-ava app, along with changes to streamline the water billing system.

The board also approved the creation of 48 posts at the sector level for coordination and expediting multiple instances, especially cleaning up the Yamuna and the 24x7 water supply project.

A government spokesperson said that these 48 posts include 13 supervising engineers' posts and 35-executive-engineer posts.

The DJB revenue director on November 17 issued an order that said 18 services of the state water utility will be made available online, as part of a 'paperless' push, while the remaining services will be added in phases.

"The water minister instructed the officials to take strict actions on the matter readers who were not doing their work properly. In light of this issue, the board decided to make all the systems completely online and transparent," official added.

Water minister Sanjivkar Jain said the online push will help developing a "corruption-free-and transparent" process.

"DJB's services will be made faster and online portals will be introduced to bring the services under one roof. Help desks will be set up in every zone to help citizens to use the online DJB services and register their grievances," Jain said.

"All DJB consumers can apply and register for the above services online by visiting website or using the M-ava mobile application," Jain said.
